By: Bala G. Abdullahi

Bayero University would continue to collaborate with national and international tertiary institutions as part of efforts to make the university a world class citadel of learning to meet the aspiration of its founding fathers and the nation.

This was disclosed by the Vice Chancellor, Professor Muhammad Yahuza Bello, shortly after signing a Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) with the Doha Academy of Tertiary Studies, Mauritius on Monday 7th August, 2017.

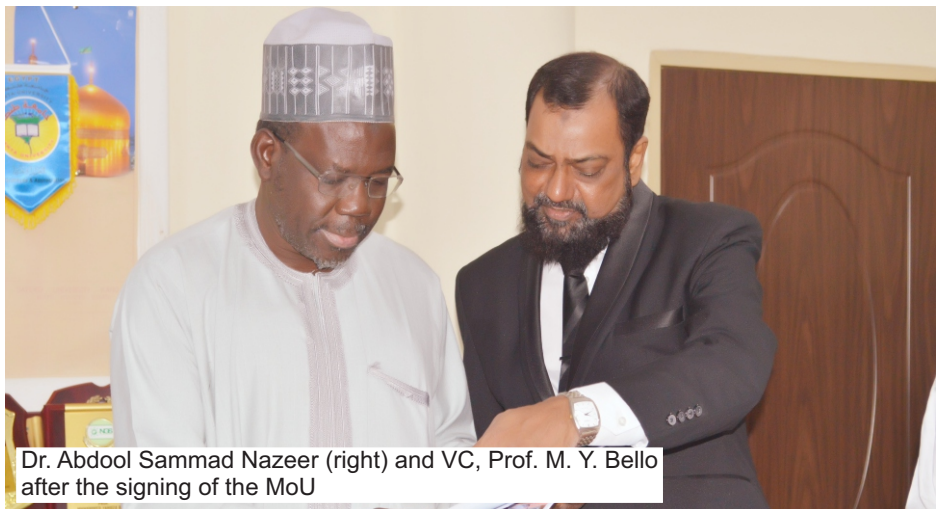

He said the MoU signed between the two institutions was only on academic support services, saying that the request for affiliation included in the MoU by the management of Doha Academy of Tertiary Studies would have to await approval from the National Universities Commission (NUC). He explained that universities in the country were not allowed to affiliate with foreign universities without the approval of the National Universities Commission (NUC).

Professor Bello said the MoU covered sending lecturers on visiting and sabbatical leave and student/staff exchange as well as holding joint conferences. He said Doha Academy would benefit tremendously from the experience of Bayero University not only in the area of Arabic and Islamic Studies requested by the institution, but also in helping them to address societal challenges through the replication of a Centre on Qur'anic Studies similar to that of Bayero University.

Earlier, the Director Doha Academy of Tertiary Studies, Mauritius, Dr. Abdool Sammad Nazeer, had told the Vice Chancellor that they were in BUK to sign MoU that would allow Doha Academy to affiliate some of its degree programmes to BUK. He said Bayero University was among the best institutions in Africa and that Doha Academy would like to benefit from its excellent academic records.

He said the team took a tour of the Department of Arabic and Islamic Studies as well as the Centre for Qur'anic Studies and that they were overwhelmed by the level of

Water Quality Key Issue for the World Population

By: Fausat Anike Opayomi

As the world population continues to increase, attaining water quality will remain a key issue in our socio-economic, industrial, health and environmental goals.

This was made known by an erudite scholar, Prof. Sani Ibrahim, Hydrobiologist from the Faculty of Life Sciences, Bayero University, Kano, while delivering the 21st Professorial Inaugural Lecture at Musa Abdullahi Auditorium, New Campus, on 27th July, 2017.

Prof. Ibrahim identified the factors and constraints to attaining water quality in Nigeria to include lack of adequate and dedicated experts who would evaluate the actual condition of our water bodies and report their actual findings; lack of proper monitoring and control because some analysts did not do their jobs honestly and sincerely; lack of communication of research findings, because the findings of most researches ended up on shelves; implementation problem as a result of neglect and the non-chalant attitude to enforce environmental laws and lack of awareness and pressure groups as well as inadequate funding and collaborative research.

However, for efficient water quality evaluation there must be improved manpower development and dedication, prompt communication of research findings, appropriate practices by government and non-governmental officials; improved funding and support for collaborative research; public enlightenment campaigns for quality water and the use of improved technologies for water treatment.

Professor Ibrahim proffered that with the involvement of water quality expert analysts from Universities and relevant research centres by government and non-governmental organizations, the true quality status of our water bodies would be made known for proper and informed decisions to be taken for safety purposes.

Technological Gaps Reason Why Social Media Outshines Conventional Media - Prof. Umar Pate

By: Nura Garba

The proliferation of technological innovations through which the social media provides the fastest, easiest and most convenient systems in disseminating information remains critical to outshining the conventional means of communication and whether people like it or not technology must be embraced and adopted in journalism practices.

The Dean, Faculty of Communication, Professor Umar Pate, made this statement on Tuesday, 8th August, 2017 in a programme, Tuesday Live monitored in NTA Network. He said conventional media in Nigeria must accept the contemporary realities of internationally advanced media outfits like the BBC that provided effective and efficient social media platforms for disseminating accurate and balanced news stories, rather than concealing the real information and providing unbalanced stories.

Prof Pate also challenged the conventional media to do more about investigative journalism, rather than reporting what people say without investigating the veracity and authenticity of the information provided.

According to him, the Faculty of Communication had received a World Bank grant of $700,000 and part of the money would be used to fully digitize the Faculty in view of the challenges of technological era. He said in September this year, UNESCO and the National Universities Commission NUC would visit the faculty to review the National Mass Communication curricula for undergraduate and postgraduates aimed at transforming to digital communication.

The Tuesday Live programme, which was titled, Media Reportage: Hate Speeches and National Development also featured Dr. Tom Adaba, the former DG of the National Broadcasting Commission (NBC), Sulaiman Uba Gaya, the Deputy President, National Guild of Editors, and Martins Oloja, a Senior Editor with the Guardian Newspaper.
